“Race for Justice: Alienation or Social Inclusion.” The concept behind the theme is to improve awareness of the causes of social exclusion and its manifestations; examine what can be done to address the problems and whether community cohesion as a government strategy is the way forward.

The conference will include delegations from as far afield as North America, The African Continent, Europe and Islands of the Caribbean. Keynote speakers will also include key government ministers from the USA, Canada, France, and the Caribbean.

The conference aims to bring together key stakeholders to explore issues such as hate crimes; extremism within the context of the Criminal Justice System; guns, gangs and knife crime and young people and examine how it:

- Informs policy provisions and key decision-making.
- Affects strategies, action-planning and delivery by both statutory and non-statutory bodies.
- Contributes to resource provision and educational support for young people.
- Provide communities, central and local government, police and other justice agencies with an insight of how to work together to put an end to gang and knife crime and effectively combat extremism.

The lead up to conference will involve young people in the UK, USA and Canada taking part in a debating competition – the two finalists will be presented with a topic for debate on the 4th December. The awards will be presented by the Attorney General with invited celebrity Formula 1’s Lewis Hamilton.

The Justice Link, commissioned by Cordell Pillay, Assistant General Secretary of Napo, has been designed as a tangible and visible representation of a commitment to working together for justice and equality. It represents working together, inclusion and the link between past, present, young, old, gender, culture and community. Sponsors of the conference will receive the Justice Link engraved with their organisations’ logo.
